Mr. Eric Olson
Chairman, North Pacific Fishery Management Council
605 West 4th Avenue, Suite 306
Anchorage, AK 99501

Dear Chairman Olson:

On behalf of the Department of State, I would like to commend the North Pacific Fishery Management Council on its efforts to develop the first-ever U.S. Fisheries Management Plan for the Arctic. As the climate changes, we believe that it is reasonable to anticipate that the range and distribution of at least some fish stocks that occur in sub-Arctic regions will likely extend or move into more northerly areas. If commercially valuable fish stocks begin to occur in significant quantities in the Arctic, there will be interest in fishing for those stocks among the fishing industries of the United States and other Arctic nations.

With that in mind, we have already begun discussing with other Arctic governments the need to consider the development of appropriate international measures to conserve and manage future Arctic fisheries. Among other things, we have urged the Canadian and Russian Governments to take note of the significant progress made by the Council in developing an Arctic FMP and have encouraged them to adopt comparable measures for the adjacent marine areas under their respective jurisdiction. More broadly, we are raising the issue of future Arctic fisheries with the full range of interested governments, including at a meeting next month of the Food and Agriculture Organization's Committee on Fisheries. The pioneering work of the Council in this regard will be a touchstone.

Sincerely,

Mr. Eric Olson, Chair
North Pacific Fishery Management Council
605 W. Fourth Avenue, Suite 306
Juneau, AK 99802-1668

Dear Chairman Olson,

We thank the North Pacific Fishery Management Council for developing a plan to manage and protect Arctic Ocean waters north of the Bering Strait, and encourage the Council to move ahead with the Arctic Fisheries Management Plan (FMP) and accompanying Environmental Assessment (EA).

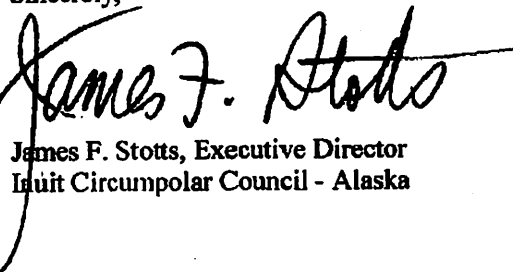

Our people depend on Arctic waters for food, travel, and subsistence. We recognize these waters are changing. The warming climate and, in particular, retreat of sea ice brings with it industrial threats such as shipping, oil and gas development, and commercial fishing.

There are no commercial fisheries north of the Bering Strait at this time. Climate change, however, may create opportunities for commercial fishing in the Arctic Ocean. Commercial fishing in these waters could compete for the same species on which we depend. It also could threaten marine mammals by competing directly for food and by harming or otherwise disturbing them as they feed, mate, and migrate. In addition, commercial fishing could disturb habitat that is important for walrus, bearded seals, eiders and other animals.

Careful management is important in these areas that are changing and vitally important to us. Before allowing commercial fishing in the Arctic, we must understand more about how it might affect the Arctic Ocean and those of us who depend on it, and it must be shown that commercial fishing can occur without harming the ecosystem or opportunities for our hunting way of life.

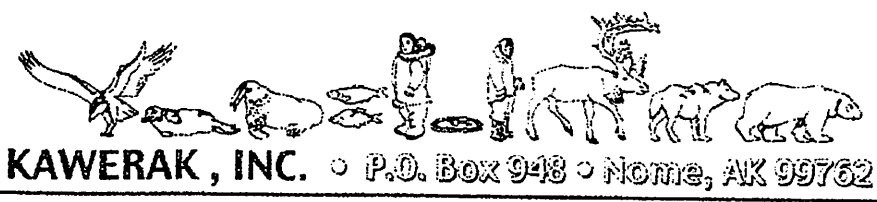

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council would take a big step forward by putting in place the Arctic FMP, and we encourage you to do so at this time. We urge the Council to take formal action to establish the Arctic FMP by adopting Alternative 2 at this time. In so doing, the Council should ensure indigenous peoples located on the Arctic Ocean coasts be consulted on any plan to establish a new fishery in the region including through an exempted fishing permit.

Sincerely,

Re: Comments to the Council regarding the Arctic Fisheries Management Plan

Dear Mr. Oliver,

Kawerak supports the creation of an Arctic Fisheries Management Plan and recommends adoption of Arctic FMP Alternative 2, Option 3 which would protect the marine environment by closing U.S. Arctic waters to commercial fishing unless and until additional information shows that commercial fishing can be undertaken without harming the health of marine ecosystems or opportunities for the subsistence way of life. With the rapid change that is occurring in the Arctic we need to be pro-active, and Alternative 2, Option 3 of the proposed FMP is a step in the right direction.

The management plan should close all waters north of Bering Strait to commercial fishing for all species, including forage species. The plan should indicate that existing small or subsistence fisheries will not be affected. Residents of the region are concerned about the potential effects of commercial fishing on their subsistence fishing and hunting.

Considerations for future commercial use of the area under the jurisdiction of the plan should require detailed studies. We believe there is a critical lack of documented information regarding our resources, including marine mammals, migratory birds and fish.

All aspects of the development and implementation of such a plan should include government-to-government Tribal consultation. We would like the Council to recommend to the National Marine Fisheries Service that Tribal consultation on this issue may be required and should be carried out wherever requested. We would like to note that consultation should not be limited to Tribes living at or north of the Bering Strait. Tribes in the Norton Sound region, and even further south, may be significantly affected by actions in the Chuckchi Sea.

Re: Arctic Fishery Management Plan C-2

Dear Chairman Olson:

As members of the scientific community, we commend the North Pacific Fishery Management Council (NPFMC) for taking a proactive approach to fisheries management of U.S. Arctic waters. Adoption of a precautionary science-based Arctic Fishery Management Plan (FMP), as proposed by the NPFMC, promises to avoid compounding stresses on populations of living marine resources that already face rapid climate change. This action will set a worthy example that, if emulated by the other Arctic nations, would promote the sustainability and resilience of these resources substantially throughout the Arctic.

Arctic conditions present unique challenges to the plants, animals and people who live there. While marine productivity in some parts of the U.S. Arctic is high, relatively few species are adapted to the cold temperatures and short production season. Just north of the Bering Strait, a steady supply of inorganic nutrients supports rapid algal growth from the sea surface to the shallow seafloor whenever illuminated by sunlight (1), with carbon fixation rates as high as  $840 \text{ g C/m}^2\text{yr}^{-1}$  (2), among the highest values anywhere in the world's ocean. Some of this algal productivity is associated with sea ice and supports a food web that includes Arctic Cod, seals, and polar bears (1). Most of the remainder sinks to the bottom where it supports a rich benthic community including crabs, clams, worms, seastars, amphipods, and urchins, as well as walrus and grey whales (1). Because cold Arctic water temperatures suppress zooplankton growth rates, relatively little pelagic production is available to support fish and other zooplanktivores. But no matter what part of the food web occupied, all Arctic animals must develop a strategy for storing enough energy during the four month growing season to survive the ensuing eight months when little or no plant growth is produced. The brief growing season places a strong constraint on species that might successfully adapt to the Arctic, even if water temperatures warm substantially.

Recent sea ice losses threaten to fundamentally transform marine food webs in the Arctic. Summertime ice losses of 40% compared with the 1979 – 2000 average (3) allows much more light to penetrate the water column during the growing season, enhancing phytoplankton growth at the expense of ice-bound algae while heating the water column and promoting zooplankton growth. Warmer seawater temperatures increase metabolic rates of cold-blooded organisms including fish, crabs and other invertebrates, increasing their basal food ration requirement. Modeling studies suggest that the overall primary productivity of the marginal sea ice ecosystem of the mid- to northern Bering Sea will decline by ~40% by 2050 (4), inducing mobile species to migrate northward to less optimal habitats in search of food (5, 6). Warmer temperatures will also likely attract more warm-adapted predators. These changes may benefit some species but are more likely to stress most, especially those that have limited capacity to adapt because of small population sizes and low reproductive rates.

Sea ice losses also expose living marine resources to exploitation. Without careful management, exploitation could easily de-stabilize the marine ecosystem (7) at a time when it is already under extraordinary pressure. Direct fishery impacts include reductions in target species populations and possibly habitat damage from fishing gear. In addition, the risk of ecosystem effects is especially great. Removals of species targeted by fishing deplete prey for predatory species. Seals, polar bears and walrus will face additional stresses if their food sources change dramatically in composition and availability, and from loss of resting stations near these sources provided by ice floes (8). Removals of these apex species would likely have strong cascading impacts on the marine ecosystem (9).

There is at present too little known about how marine ecosystems function in the Arctic, let alone how they will respond to the dramatic changes in progress, to prescribe safe harvest levels for living marine resources in the U.S. Arctic. Until the rate and likely duration of sea ice losses as well as the ensuing ecosystem responses are better understood, closing the U.S. Arctic to commercial fishing is a prudent measure to avoid compounding the already considerable ecosystem stresses in progress. Closing the U.S. Arctic to commercial fishing until safe harvest levels can be assessed with reasonable confidence, will provide yet another demonstration of the U.S. commitment to responsible fisheries management. This approach is appropriately precautionary, and is an important step towards ensuring sustainable fisheries and healthy marine ecosystems in U.S. waters. In addition, this action will set a commendable example for other nations, providing a beacon of hope not only for the species struggling to adapt to a rapidly changing environment, but to everyone with a stake in the long-term productivity of the ocean.

Re: Northwest Arctic Borough Comments
North Pacific Fishery Management Council
Arctic Fishery Management Plan (FMP) and associated Environmental Assessment (EA)
191st Plenary Session

Dear Mr. Olson;

The Northwest Arctic Borough is glad to submit these comments on the Arctic Fishery Management Plan (FMP). We support the development of an Arctic Fishery Management Plan and urge the North Pacific Fishery Management Council to adopt it in a timely manner. The Northwest Arctic Borough supports the proposed Alternative 2, which closes Arctic waters to additional commercial fishing.

There isn't sufficient baseline information about Arctic marine waters to make informed decisions regarding the opening of commercial fisheries in the Arctic. The information about scallops, Bering Sea and Aleutian Island ground fish, and Bering Sea and Aleutian Island king and tanner crab is limited, including a lack of sufficient data about their stock populations. Marine ecosystems and marine mammals are another issue to be taken into consideration before deciding whether or not to open commercial fisheries.

The residents of the borough depend heavily on subsistence resources, and the Arctic fisheries provide healthy food and a spiritual connection to the Inupiaq people who permanently inhabit the Arctic. At the same time, the productivity of the Arctic environment to support our subsistence-based economy is extremely sensitive, and the safe and available harvest of these coastal resources is necessary for survival at a time when the costs of living are continuing to increase.

In closing, the Northwest Arctic Borough encourages the North Pacific Fishery Management Council to choose Alternative 2, which is a responsible approach to fishery management in Arctic waters. There are many questions that need to be answered before any decisions to open commercial fishing in Arctic waters are taken. Decisions that are made at your table can affect the very lives of the people that inhabit the residents of the Northwest Arctic Borough.

We look forward to hosting a North Pacific Fishery Management Council meeting here in the borough chambers in Kotzebue.

Thank you for your time.

Re: Arctic Fishery Management Plan C-2

Dear Chairman Olson and Mr. Mecum,

The undersigned individuals and organizations applaud the North Pacific Fishery Management Council for developing a forward-thinking, precautionary, and science-based Fishery Management Plan (FMP) for U.S. Arctic waters. The proposed FMP will help protect Arctic ecosystems and the subsistence lifestyle of many Arctic peoples by closing U.S. portions of the Arctic Ocean to commercial fishing at this time. Accordingly, we urge the Council to move forward to establish the Arctic FMP and to adopt Alternative 2 at its upcoming meeting in February.

The Arctic is home to an incredible variety of animals including fish, seals, whales, polar bears, walrus, and seabirds. Arctic peoples rely on this vibrant, but fragile ecosystem to support their subsistence way of life. In addition, all of us depend on the Arctic to help regulate the earth's climate and keep our planet from overheating.

As the Council is aware, the Arctic is under assault from rapid climate change and mounting development pressure. The Arctic is warming about twice as fast as the rest of the planet. The extent of summer sea ice—which supports species as diverse as algae and polar bears—is declining dramatically. Permafrost is melting, weather patterns are changing, and habitats are changing faster than many species are capable of adapting. These changes make hunting and other subsistence activities more difficult for Arctic peoples, and place immense stress on Arctic ecosystems.

These changes also make the Arctic more vulnerable to industrialization. As Arctic sea ice melts, pressure to develop energy resources in the Arctic is increasing and formerly inaccessible marine routes, such as the fabled Northwest Passage, may become viable corridors for commercial shipping. And of course, expansion of industrial fishing is a possibility. If allowed to proceed in an unsustainable manner, these industrial activities would compound the already-high level of stress on delicate Arctic ecosystems, risking catastrophic consequences.

Given the pressure on the Arctic environment, closing U.S. Arctic waters to commercial fishing is the reasonable and prudent course of action. By adopting Alternative 2, which closes U.S. portions of the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas to commercial fishing unless and until new information shows that such fishing can be conducted without harming the health of the ecosystem or opportunities for the subsistence way of life, the Council will protect the Arctic from the direct threats posed by commercial fishing. The Council's action also will set an example for other Arctic nations that could lead to even more widespread and substantial protections.

The Council has shown great leadership by developing and considering a protective, precautionary Arctic FMP that will benefit both Arctic peoples and the Arctic environment. We urge the Council to continue to lead by adopting Alternative 2 when it meets in Seattle in February.

Re: Arctic Fishery Management Plan C-2

Dear Chairman Olson and Mr. Mecum:

N.P.F.M.C.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed Arctic Fishery Management Plan (FMP) and associated Environmental Assessment (EA). Audubon Alaska, Oceana, Ocean Conservancy, and Pew Environment Group commend the North Pacific Fishery Management Council and its staff for preparing a forward-thinking, precautionary approach to fishery management U.S. Arctic waters. We urge the Council to adopt Alternative 2 with Option 3.

Arctic FMP Alternative 2 would protect the marine environment by closing U.S. Arctic waters to commercial fishing unless and until additional information shows that commercial fishing can be undertaken without harming the health of marine ecosystems or opportunities for the subsistence way of life. It would also amend the Crab FMP to terminate its coverage at the Bering Strait, allowing for more holistic management of the region under a single FMP. Arctic ecosystems are under threat from unprecedented climate change. Moreover, relative to other regions, there is a paucity of scientific information on Arctic fish stocks and other ecological information necessary to manage fisheries in the Arctic. In light of the rapid pace of climate change, the lack of basic scientific information, the sensitive nature of Arctic ecosystems, and the potential impact of commercial fishing on subsistence activities in the region, we encourage the Council to choose Alternative 2, which is a prudent and responsible approach to fishery management in the Arctic.

The EA suggests three possible options for establishing reference points in compliance with the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (MSA). We encourage the Council to choose Option 3, which establishes quantitative calculations to determine Optimum Yield in U.S. Arctic waters. Currently, these calculations result in an Optimum Yield of zero, meaning that U.S. Arctic waters would be closed to commercial fishing at this time. If at some point in the future new information indicates that prosecution of an Arctic fishery is appropriate, Option 3 establishes a framework—including a focus on ecosystem-based fisheries management and control rules—to help ensure sustainable management.

This proactive and precautionary Arctic FMP will protect fragile Arctic marine ecosystems already feeling the effects of climate change from the additive stresses of commercial fishing. The Council will also set an example for other Arctic resource managers, both in the United States and in other Arctic nations. If others follow the Council's lead, it will help Arctic communities and ecosystems remain healthy and vibrant in the face of a rapidly changing climate. We urge the Council to adopt Alternative 2 with Option 3.

The following general comments discuss the importance of the Arctic marine environment, the changes facing that environment, and the stresses those changes impose upon Arctic ecosystems. With that in mind, they discuss why a precautionary fishery management plan is rational, within the Council's authority, and timely. We will provide detailed comments on the EA to NMFS during the formal comment period.

I. The Arctic Is Home To Unique Communities And Ecosystems, Supports Many Animal Species, And Plays A Critical Role In Regulating The Earth's Climate.

The Arctic is among the most beautiful and forbidding places on Earth. Life there swings between twenty-four hour daylight in the summer, and the long, dark, and cold months of the winter. The U.S. Arctic is home to tens of thousands of people, many of whom depend on a healthy marine environment to support their subsistence way of life. A host of animals adapted to the harsh environment live in the Arctic year-round, and the region serves as a breeding and feeding ground for many other species during the summer months. The Arctic also plays a vital role in the regulation of the Earth's climate.

The Arctic has sustained human communities for thousands of years. Many Arctic residents continue to depend on intact ecosystems. Along the coasts of the Chukchi and Beaufort seas, certain villages hunt bowhead whales. These communities view the whale hunt as a centerpiece of their culture; they prepare for the hunt year-round, and share and celebrate successful hunts. Arctic peoples also depend on other ocean resources, such as fish, walrus, seals, and seabirds, to support their subsistence way of life. For many residents of the Arctic, there is a direct connection between the continued health of the marine environment and the health of their food supply and culture.

In addition to supporting human communities, the Arctic is home to some of the world's most iconic species. Marine mammals such as bowhead, gray, and beluga whales; narwhals; Pacific walrus; spotted, bearded, ribbon, and ringed seals; and polar bears inhabit the waters of the Chukchi and Beaufort seas. Migratory species from around the globe—including gray, humpback, minke, and killer whales and millions of sea birds—take advantage of the burst of summer productivity in the Arctic for breeding, feeding, and rearing of their young. The Arctic supports an array of fish, invertebrate, and algal species. Forage species such as krill, Arctic cod, and capelin are a vital part of the marine food web. Yet for all this, the Arctic has relatively low diversity, and the apex predators are dominated by long-lived species with low reproductive rates and multi-annual generation times. These traits make Arctic ecosystems particularly susceptible to disruption and overexploitation.

The Arctic is important to all of us. The gradient of cold air near the pole and warm tropical air near the equator is a primary driver of atmospheric circulation and ocean currents. These currents move energy away from the equator toward the North Pole, where it eventually escapes to space, helping to regulate the Earth's climate. In this sense, the Arctic acts as an air conditioner for the planet. In a broader sense, the Arctic occupies an important place in our history, our mythology, and our imaginations, and it is part of our shared natural heritage.

II. The Arctic Ocean Is Already Experiencing Fundamental Change, And More Changes Are Likely In The Near Future

Protected by sea ice, an unforgiving climate, and geographic remoteness, the ecosystems of the Arctic Ocean have been, until recently, among the Earth's least-disturbed. However, climate change is affecting the Arctic, which is warming nearly twice as fast as the rest of the world. This is forcing pronounced alterations of the Arctic environment that affect Arctic ecosystems and have worldwide implications.

The most dramatic change in the Arctic has been the rapid loss of sea ice. In 2007, the seasonal minimum sea ice extent in the Arctic was 23% lower than it had ever been since satellite measurements began. In 2008, the minimum sea ice extent was lower than any year but 2007. In addition, ice cover was more diffuse and the ice pack was thinner, suggesting that 2008 established a record low ice volume. The rate at which sea ice cover is declining exceeds even the most sensational predictions from just a few years ago, and scientists now predict the Arctic could be seasonally ice-free by 2030.

Melting sea ice results in a positive feedback loop in which ice melt accelerates warming and leads to even more ice melt. Open ocean absorbs sunlight much more readily than ice, which reflects most of the sunlight back to space. As a result, when sea ice melts, the newly exposed water absorbs more sunlight, leading to additional heating of the water column and additional sea ice melt. This phenomenon happens naturally every year. However, in recent years, climate change has amplified this feedback so much that the Arctic may have crossed a tipping point that will result in an abrupt shift to a seasonally ice-free Arctic Ocean.

The additional solar energy absorbed by newly exposed Arctic waters also leads to warmer air temperatures in the fall and early winter. As autumn comes to the Arctic, the ocean transfers to the atmosphere the extra heat that it absorbed during the summer. For example, anomalously warm sea surface temperatures in the Chukchi Sea during the summer of 2007 were associated with a late freeze-over of the Chukchi Sea and November temperatures in Barrow that were 8° to 9° C (14° to 16° F) above normal.

Reduced sea ice cover in the Arctic will likely result in increased ocean acidification, as well. Roughly one-third of the carbon dioxide that is added to the atmosphere from the combustion of fossil fuels will dissolve into seawater. There, it reacts to form carbonic acid, which increases the acidity of the water. The solubility of carbon dioxide gas in seawater increases as water temperature decreases. In addition, low-salinity waters have less capacity to buffer acidification than do high-salinity waters. The Arctic Ocean has relatively low water temperatures and—because it receives large volumes of freshwater from the Mackenzie and other rivers—it has relatively low salinity. As a result, it is particularly susceptible to acidification. The Arctic's ice cover has acted as a barrier to carbon dioxide absorption and has slowed acidification of the polar sea. But as sea ice disappears, the surface waters of the Arctic Ocean will likely absorb carbon dioxide from the atmosphere at higher rates.

Acidification will introduce a fundamental shift in the biogeochemical cycling of the Arctic Ocean. Among the most immediate impacts will be carbonate ion depletion and its related effects, which will make it more difficult for shellfish and other marine organisms that create their shells and other hard parts from calcium carbonate. Animals most at risk include mollusks, crustaceans, echinoderms, and encrusting algae and certain types of marine phytoplankton. Among other effects, increasing acidity will also change the growth rates of photosynthetic phytoplankton, the toxicity of marine toxins, the availability of ammonia for uptake by marine plants, and the efficiency of respiration in fish and other marine organisms. The diversity of the anticipated effects and the inherent complexity of ecosystem interactions make it difficult to predict with certainty how Arctic ecosystems will respond to increased ocean acidification. That said, ocean acidification will almost certainly be an important stressor in the Arctic marine environment.

III. The Rapid Pace Of Change In The Arctic Ocean Has Already Introduced Enormous Stress Into Arctic Marine Ecosystems, And The Expansion Of Industrial Activities To The Arctic Will Compound The Threat.

As described above, climate change has already triggered a series of changes to the Arctic environment, including loss of sea ice cover and warming temperatures. More changes, such as ocean acidification, will likely follow. The cumulative effect of these rapid changes threatens to unravel delicate Arctic ecosystems. The expansion of industrial activity into the Arctic will only serve to multiply the pressure on Arctic ecosystems.

Climate-related change has profound effects on Arctic peoples, opportunities for the subsistence way of life, and Arctic marine ecosystems. Reduced ice cover affects Arctic people by making fishing, hunting, and travel more difficult and unpredictable. Loss of sea ice will almost certainly result in a fundamental restructuring of the Arctic marine food web. The loss of sea ice may shift the flow of productivity from primarily benthic and ice-associated food webs to pelagic food webs. The reduction of sea ice also eliminates habitat for ice-dependent species. Projected impacts to polar bears from loss of sea ice habitat led the United States Department of Interior to list the species as threatened under the Endangered Species Act. Loss of sea ice also has adverse impacts on walrus, which use sea ice as a platform on which to haul out and rest between foraging sessions, and on many other species. In addition, the changes brought about by ocean acidification are likely to outstrip the adaptive capacity of many Arctic marine species. In short, loss of sea ice cover, the potential for seasonally ice-free conditions across the Arctic, and other climate-related changes are, and will continue to be, major stressors for many species in the Arctic. These changes may lead to local loss or extinction of species that cannot adapt to the rapidly changing conditions.

As discussed in the EA accompanying the proposed Arctic FMP, a reduction in sea ice cover in the Arctic also opens the region to an expansion of industrial activities. The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation has already documented an increase in ship traffic in the Bering and Chukchi seas, and as more ice melts, more ships will seek to transit the Arctic Ocean. Similarly, there is a push to expand oil and gas exploration and development in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas, leading to increased seismic testing, drilling, and vessel traffic in Arctic waters. Finally, as the Council is aware, as sea ice retreats and stocks migrate north, expansion of commercial fishing into Arctic waters is a possibility.

Expansion of commercial shipping, oil and gas activities, and/or commercial fishing into the Arctic would add pressure to fragile Arctic ecosystems. The growth of commercial shipping in the Arctic will result in increased noise, air, and water pollution. Greater emissions of nitrogen oxides and carbon monoxide could triple ozone levels in the Arctic, and increased black carbon emissions would result in reduced ice reflectivity that could exacerbate the decline of sea ice. Increased shipping would also bring with it the risk of a catastrophic spill from a shipping accident. The relative risk of such spills is high in the Arctic due to the harsh conditions, remoteness of the region from response capabilities, and lack of technology to clean up a spill in broken ice conditions. A large spill in the Arctic would have devastating consequences that would linger in the ecosystem for decades. Increased oil and gas activities also create a substantial risk of an oil spill. In addition, seismic activity, drilling, and vessel traffic from oil and gas operations would introduce significant noise to the marine environment, which can adversely affect whales and other marine animals. Finally, the introduction of commercial fishing to the Arctic could alter food webs, impact seafloor habitat, cause noise disturbance, and impact opportunities for the subsistence way of life.

Taken alone, any of the above-described changes would add substantial stress to Arctic ecosystems. But many of these changes are likely to be concurrent, and will potentially have synergistic effects on the health of the ecosystem and opportunities for the subsistence way of life. In addition, Arctic ecosystems may be particularly sensitive to disturbance. Compared to warmer regions, Arctic ecosystems have fewer species filling similar roles, which makes changes to one species more likely to affect other species. For example, Arctic cod is a critical link between productivity at lower trophic levels and species at higher trophic levels. Declines in Arctic cod are likely to decrease prey availability at higher trophic levels, resulting in population declines and a potential restructuring of the ecosystem.

In sum, Arctic ecosystems are at a dramatic crossroads. They are experiencing incredible pressure from climate change and ocean acidification. If the Arctic is subjected to high-risk activities such as large-scale commercial shipping, oil and gas exploration and development, and commercial fishing, those activities would multiply the pressures on the already-stressed ecosystems of the far North. But by the same token, preventing one of these high-risk activities would not only eliminate the direct risks posed by that activity, it would also eliminate the cumulative or synergistic risks posed by that activity in concert with all the other threats facing Arctic ecosystems. As a result, any proactive, precautionary management action that would prevent the expansion of an industrial activity into the Arctic, such as the proposed Arctic FMP, is sensible, responsible, and appropriate.

IV. Adoption Of A Precautionary Arctic FMP Is Appropriate, Authorized, And Timely.

A. The Arctic FMP's Proactive and Precautionary Approach Is The Right Management Strategy For U.S. Arctic Waters.

Currently, there is no commercial fishing in the U.S. portions of the Arctic Ocean. However, as the Council has recognized, climate change—particularly the rapid decline of sea ice cover—has created the potential for commercial fishing to expand into U.S. waters north of the Bering Strait. Much basic scientific information about the region is still lacking. No one knows the size or scope of the impacts that might result from commercial fishing in the Arctic. However, as discussed above, the development of commercial fishing would likely place additional stress on fragile Arctic ecosystems that are already under enormous pressure to adapt to a host of concurrent changes. In this context, it is prudent and responsible to take proactive action that will protect the marine environment in the U.S. Arctic by closing the region to all commercial fishing unless and until new information shows that such fishing can be conducted without harming the health of marine ecosystems or opportunities for the subsistence way of life. The precautionary approach embodied by the proposed Arctic FMP is an appropriate and reasonable approach to fishery management in the Arctic.

Relative to other regions, there is little scientific information available on the Arctic Ocean. Until the Council has adequate scientific information on Arctic fish stocks and other ecological information necessary to manage fisheries, closing U.S. Arctic waters to commercial fishing is the only prudent management strategy. As noted in the EA prepared in conjunction with the proposed Arctic FMP, scientists know relatively little about the abundance, distribution, migration, and role of fish and other marine species in the Chukchi and Beaufort ecosystems. The scientific data necessary to understand and manage Arctic fisheries are, in large measure, unavailable. Much of the information that is available for the Chukchi Sea is over fifteen years old, and only about a third of the Beaufort Sea has been surveyed recently. Additionally, sea ice cover and water temperature play important roles in Arctic marine ecology. Yet, as discussed above, those factors have changed dramatically in the last fifteen years and are continuing to change at a startling pace. In short, at this time, we do not know enough about Arctic marine ecosystems to conduct commercial fishing operations safely and intelligently. As a result, it is logical and responsible to close U.S. Arctic waters to commercial fishing unless and until science shows that it is possible to develop a commercial fishery without harming the marine environment or opportunities for the subsistence way of life.

While there is relatively little scientific information about the Arctic Ocean, Arctic peoples have a wealth of local and traditional knowledge. That local and traditional knowledge must be included in decisions that affect Arctic ecosystems, including fisheries management. Implementing a management structure that closes the Chukchi and Beaufort seas to commercial fishing at this time will allow for community input and consideration of local and traditional knowledge before decisions are made to allow fishing. In particular, local and traditional knowledge about the potential impacts of fisheries, such as competition with marine mammals for food, noise impacts, and entanglement, must be considered in any decision to allow commercial fishing in the Arctic.

A precautionary approach is particularly appropriate for U.S. Arctic waters because many Arctic peoples depend on healthy and resilient marine ecosystems to support their subsistence way of life. As noted above, many people who live on Alaska's Arctic coast rely on the ocean for food and other resources. Arctic peoples' ocean-based subsistence activities are central to their culture and sense of identity. In this context—where a misstep in the management of a fishery could have cascading effects that jeopardize subsistence and cultural traditions—extra caution is warranted. Arctic peoples are the ones who will suffer the consequences of mistakes in Arctic fisheries management. Because current information is insufficient to accurately predict the impacts of commercial fishing on subsistence activities in the Arctic, it is proper to protect the Arctic marine environment by prohibiting commercial fishing unless and until new information demonstrates that commercial fishing can be conducted sustainably, without harming the ecosystems or peoples of the Chukchi and Beaufort seas.

B. The Council's Precautionary Approach Is Fully Consistent With The Magnuson-Stevens Act And Its Implementing Regulations.

The Council's authority to prepare an FMP stems from the MSA, as amended. See 16 U.S.C. §§ 1801, et seq. The MSA is a mandate for "conservation and management" of our nation's marine resources. Id. § 1801(b)(1). It contemplates protective management actions, including prohibitions on fishing. As a result, the Council and NMFS have authority to implement an Arctic FMP that will conserve and manage the fishery resources of U.S. Arctic waters by prohibiting commercial fishing unless and until new information shows that such fishing can take place without harming the marine ecosystem. Moreover, the manner in which the proposed Arctic FMP accomplishes its conservation goal satisfies all the requirements of the MSA.

The MSA requires protection and preservation of our marine resources, and recognizes the importance of habitats and intact marine systems. The first enumerated purpose of the MSA is "to take immediate action to conserve and manage the fishery resources found off the coasts of the United States." Id. § 1801(b)(1). This conservation mandate applies broadly to all stocks of fish<sup>1</sup> and all fisheries. Id. § 1802(15). It also applies to fish habitat. Id.; see also id. §§ 1801(a)(2), (6); 1801(b)(7), 1853(a)(7) (emphasizing protection of fish habitat).

Moreover, the Council and NMFS have broad discretion to implement the MSA's "conservation and management" mandate. Under the MSA, "conservation and management" can include any measure "required to rebuild, restore, or maintain . . . any fishery resource and the marine environment," as well as any measure "designed to assure that . . . irreversible or long-term adverse effects on fishery resources and the marine environment are avoided." Id. § 1802(5). When developing FMPs, regional Councils "have the initial authority to ascertain factual circumstances, to establish management objectives, and to propose management measures that will achieve those objectives." 50 C.F.R. § 600.305(a)(2). FMPs may include any measures or restrictions "necessary and appropriate for the conservation and management of the fishery." 16 U.S.C. § 1853(b)(14). NMFS may enforce the MSA as "necessary to carry out the conservation and management measures of an approved [Fisheries Management Plan]." Nat'l Fisheries Inst., Inc. v. Mosbacher, 732 F. Supp. 210, 216 (D.D.C. 1990).

The proposed Arctic FMP lies well within the MSA's broad conservation and management mandate. The Council found that changes brought about by climate change and retreating sea ice could trigger an expansion of commercial fishing into U.S. Arctic waters. In light of this possibility, the Council determined that U.S. Arctic waters require conservation and management, thus necessitating an FMP. See 16 U.S.C. § 1852(h)(1). As part of the proposed Arctic FMP, the Council established management objectives that include prioritizing the long-term viability of fish populations by, among other things, preventing unregulated fishing and accounting for scientific uncertainty. See Proposed Arctic FMP (Jan. 2009), at 9. These decisions and actions all lie within the Council's discretion, and are fully consistent with the conservation mandate of the MSA.

The MSA unquestionably contemplates conservation and management actions that prohibit fishing. The Act explicitly permits FMPs that "designate zones where . . . fishing shall be limited, or shall not be permitted." Id. § 1853(b)(2). This authority extends to actions taken pursuant to the MSA's fundamental policy of conservation and management of fisheries and the marine environment. Courts, too, have recognized NMFS's broad authority and discretion to prohibit fishing in certain areas. See Se. Fisheries Ass'n, Inc. v. Mosbacher, 1990 WL 304274, *5 (D.D.C. 1990) (explaining that "there is not question" that the MSA authorizes NMFS to close certain areas to fishing). Given the lack of baseline information on the marine environment in the Arctic, the concomitant scientific uncertainty, and the unprecedented pace and scale of change the Arctic marine environment is already experiencing, the MSA authorizes and prudence dictates a precautionary ban on development of commercial fisheries in the Arctic to achieve the MSA's conservation and management policies.

In addition to coming within the MSA's broad conservation mandate, the proposed FMP accomplishes its conservation goal in compliance with the requirements of the MSA and its implementing regulations.

The MSA requires conservation and management measures contained in an FMP be based on the best scientific information available. 16 U.S.C. § 1851(a)(2). They also must be consistent with ten "National Standards" set forth in the MSA. Id. § 1853(a)(1)(C); see also id. § 1851(a)(1)–(a)(10). NMFS recently issued amended guidelines for National Standard 1 (NS1), which requires that conservation and management measures "prevent overfishing while achieving, on a continuing basis, the optimum yield from each fishery for the United States fishing industry." 16 U.S.C. § 181851(a)(1); see 74 Fed. Reg. 3178 (Jan. 16, 2009) (publishing final rule on amended NS1 guidelines). Among other things, the new NS1 guidelines allow FMPs to classify some fish species as "ecosystem component species." 50 C.F.R. § 600.310(d)(5). Unlike other stocks in the fishery, ecosystem component species do not require status determination criteria. The proposed Arctic FMP complies with these statutory and regulatory requirements.

The proposed Arctic FMP recognizes that scientific information is not abundant for U.S. Arctic marine ecosystems. See Proposed Arctic FMP (Jan. 2009), at 9 ("Data are scarce for estimating the abundance and biomass of Arctic fishes."). As a result, the Council factored in relatively high levels of uncertainty when developing the Arctic FMP's conservation and management measures. Specifically, to go along with Alternative 2, the proposed Arctic FMP includes three different options for categorizing and, where appropriate, setting reference points and status determination criteria for Arctic species. Option 1 identifies three species—saffron cod, Arctic cod, and snow crab—as subjects of the FMP and specifies reference points and status determination criteria for those three fisheries. Option 2 categorizes all Arctic fish as either prohibited or ecosystem component species; neither of these categories requires reference points or status determination criteria. Option 3 blends the first two approaches. It categorizes saffron cod, Arctic cod, and snow crab as target species, and other Arctic species as ecosystem component species. Option 3 sets reference points and status determination criteria for the three target species, but not for the ecosystem component species.

Any of these options are a valid approach to fishery management in the Arctic, and all three options arrive at the same result: a prohibition on commercial fishing in U.S. Arctic waters. Under Option 2, which tracks the new National Standard 1 guidelines, the FMP would prohibit commercial fishing in U.S. Arctic waters because it would not authorize any target fisheries. Under Options 1 and 3, the Arctic FMP takes into account uncertainty, nonconsumptive value, costs, and ecological factors and concludes that OY for the target species is zero. Because OY for the target species is zero, Options 1 and 3 would prohibit commercial fishing in U.S. Arctic waters until such time as new scientific information changes the result of the calculation. In all cases, the determination to prohibit commercial fishing in the Arctic is based on the best science available and is fully consistent with MSA.

While all three options are fully consistent with the MSA, we encourage the Council to choose Option 3. Despite the limitations imposed on its quantitative calculations, Option 3 provides a strong justification for an OY of zero. Moreover, if new information leads to an increased OY at some point in the future, Option 3 provides for control rules that will allow for better planning by indicating how the Council may manage the region in the future. Lastly, by defining target and ecosystem component species, Option 3 provides a holistic framework that is consistent with the Council's intent to take an ecosystem approach to management in the region.

The Arctic FMP recognizes the enormous changes that are occurring in the Arctic and that scientific information on Arctic ecosystems is limited. In light of these factors, the FMP takes a precautionary approach that prohibits commercial fishing unless and until new information shows that commercial fishing can be conducted in an ecologically sustainable manner that maintains opportunities for the subsistence way of life. This approach is fully consistent with the requirements of the MSA and its implementing regulations. Until there is more data on Arctic species and ecosystems, the Council's precautionary approach is the most sensible strategy for fishery management in U.S. portions of the Arctic Ocean.

C. The Time Is Right For Final Action On The Arctic FMP

The time is right for the Council to adopt a precautionary Arctic FMP. As described above, Arctic marine ecosystems face enormous stress from environmental changes including warming temperatures, loss of sea ice cover, and ocean acidification. Implementing an initial prohibition on commercial fishing in the U.S. portions of the Arctic Ocean will allow scientists time to understand how these rapid changes are affecting the plants and animals of the Arctic, so that the Council can make informed management choices in the future.

Currently, there is no commercial fishing in U.S. Arctic waters. As a result, a prohibition on commercial fishing will have no adverse economic impact. Taking a proactive approach to fishery management in the Arctic will likely avoid conflict with industry and other management entities. By laying out the ground rules for commercial fishing before commercial fishing takes place, the Council will allow for more effective planning and will prevent a situation in which fishery managers must rush to catch up with the fisheries.

The Council implemented an extensive outreach program to ensure that Arctic residents and others interested in the region were aware of and involved in the decision-making process. Council representatives gave presentations and solicited feedback on the Arctic FMP from a wide variety of organizations and individuals. See Appendix II, Proposed Arctic FMP (Jan. 2009), at 281–97. Now, a range of interest groups, organizations, and communities have expressed support for Council adoption of a proactive, precautionary Arctic FMP. Native organizations and communities including the North Slope Borough, the Northwest Arctic Borough, the Maniilaq Association, Kawerak, Inc., and the Eskimo Walrus Commission have all commented in support of an Arctic FMP that would initially ban commercial fishing in U.S. portions of the Arctic Ocean. Industry, too has testified in support of a proactive and precautionary Arctic FMP. The Arctic FMP also has the support of a diverse array of environmental organizations including Alaska Audubon, Alaska Marine Conservation Council, Greenpeace, Oceana, Ocean Conservancy, Pacific Environment, Pew Environmental Group, and World Wildlife Fund.

Adoption of a precautionary Arctic FMP also has international implications. On June 3, 2008, President Bush signed into law Senate Joint Resolution 17, which urges the United States to “initiate discussions and take necessary steps with other Arctic nations to negotiate an agreement or agreements for managing migratory, transboundary, and straddling fish stocks in the Arctic Ocean and establishing a new international fisheries management organization for the region.” Pub. L. 110-243, 122 Stat. 1569 (2008). Adoption of the proposed Arctic FMP would further encourage the international negotiations called for in the Joint Resolution. By adopting and implementing the proposed Arctic FMP, the United States will demonstrate to other Arctic nations its commitment to protecting the living marine resources of the Arctic, and the Arctic FMP—once in place—will serve as the foundation for the continued international discussions. On a more symbolic level, Council adoption of the Arctic FMP would be a fitting way to bring to a close the International Polar Year, which ends in March of 2009. By taking action on the proposed Arctic FMP now, the North Pacific Fishery Management Council will help to lead the nation and world in the responsible stewardship of fishery resources.

Finally, the proposed Arctic FMP has been thoroughly reviewed, discussed, and vetted by the Council and its committees, and the Council’s public. Throughout this process, the Council has developed a significant record that supports the proposed FMP. The Council first requested that its staff prepare a draft discussion paper on options for management of fisheries in U.S. Arctic waters in October 2006. In December of the same year, the Council reviewed the discussion paper and requested an expanded evaluation of management options. In June 2007, the Council reviewed the expanded discussion paper and instructed its staff to begin analysis of Alternatives for establishing an Arctic FMP that would initially close the region to commercial fishing and to work with the Ecosystem Committee and report progress at the end of the year. The Ecosystem Committee reviewed the proposed work plan for developing an Arctic FMP analysis package, and developed recommendations for Council consideration. In October of 2007, the Council tasked its staff with preparing a draft Arctic FMP and a National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) analysis. Council staff also developed and implemented an outreach program designed to inform Arctic residents of the Council’s intent to prepare an Arctic FMP. A year later, Council staff unveiled a preliminary draft Arctic FMP and accompanying NEPA document at the October 2008 meeting. The Scientific and Statistical Committee (SSC) reviewed those documents and provided feedback to staff. Staff offered a revised FMP and NEPA document at the Council's December 2008 meeting, and the SSC again provided feedback and suggestions. At the Council's February 2009 meeting in Seattle, the SSC, the Advisory Panel, and the Council itself are all slated to review the proposed Arctic FMP. After more than two years of development and refinement, the Arctic FMP has been thoroughly reviewed at the Council level, and is ready for the next step.

V. Conclusion

The Arctic is a beautiful and harsh environment, but it is under threat. As the Council has recognized, Arctic marine ecosystems are under tremendous stress from climate change, including the decline of sea ice. This same loss of sea ice cover increases the possibility of the development of commercial fisheries north of the Bering Strait. Although it is difficult to anticipate the degree to which commercial fishing may impact these ecosystems, expansion of commercial fishing into the Arctic would likely pose yet another threat to an already-stressed environment.

The Council has demonstrated its leadership and stewardship by proposing an Arctic FMP that takes a science-based, precautionary approach to fishery management in the Arctic. It protects Arctic marine ecosystems by closing U.S. Arctic waters to commercial fishing unless and until additional information shows that commercial fishing can be conducted without harming the environment. This approach is responsible, consistent with the law, and timely. We commend the Council for its work thus far, and urge it to adopt Alternative 2 with Option 3 for the Arctic FMP at its February meeting.

Re: Arctic Fisheries Management C-2

Dear Mr. Olson and Mr. Mecum,

On behalf of World Wildlife Fund (WWF), I am pleased to submit comments regarding the North Pacific Fishery Management Council's (Council) consideration to adopt the Arctic Fishery Management Plan (FMP) at this historic meeting. WWF has continuously supported the Council's Arctic FMP proposal, Agenda Item C-2. Among the highest priorities for WWF's Bering Sea program is achieving and maintaining sustainable management of the Arctic ecosystem. We view the Arctic FMP as an important step in keeping the Bering and Chukchi ecosystems healthy for the future.

Given the rapid changes underway in our marine environment, and particularly in the Arctic, taking a precautionary approach to managing our nation's fisheries is more important than ever. WWF believes that the Council's development of an Arctic FMP represents a critical precautionary step. Setting aside sensitive Arctic areas to allow for rigorous scientific studies on the resiliency and productivity of the ecosystem prior to commercial fishing activity sets an excellent example for other nations in the circumpolar region, and even in the high seas of the Arctic.

We have seen firsthand the effects of unregulated fishing in the Bering Sea Donut Hole and the resulting pollock fishery collapse in 1992. Pollock fisheries and the ecosystem have still not recovered fully in the Donut Hole. We must not allow those events to recur in the Arctic. Therefore, the Council must act with reasonable haste.

We underscore the importance of this action as it relates to the broader international perspective of fisheries in the Arctic. We have recently seen the Council's progressive approach reflected in documents distributed in the European Union. The actions of the Council on this issue could position the United States as a leader for establishing the kind of management necessary for the Arctic.

The Council's willingness to proactively address this issue is timely. As the United States National Snow and Ice Data Center recently reported, summer Arctic sea ice extent was the second lowest on record in 2008, following the record lowest Arctic summer sea ice extent in 2007. Thus, the Arctic environment may very soon see substantially increased cumulative impacts from shipping and mineral extraction activities in Arctic Seas as a consequence of diminishing ice cover.

The global community is escalating its interest in the Arctic for transportation and natural resource extraction, as demonstrated by Russia's recent move to increase its Arctic claims. Thus, it is important for the Council to move forward with its current planned schedule on the Arctic FMP. Moreover, it is important that the Council continue to provide the leadership example to stakeholders nationally and internationally of moving cautiously in the absence of science and great uncertainty with respect to activities that may have significant effects on a fragile ecosystem that is slow to change and slow to recover from disruptions or damage.

Therefore, WWF encourages the Council to take necessary steps to forward its final action on adopting Arctic FMP Agenda Item C-2. Setting aside the Arctic will help protect the resilience of Arctic ecosystems, prevent additional pressure on currently-stressed wildlife and important marine habitat areas, and ensure the continued productivity of the Arctic's adjacent seas. More importantly, the implementation of the Arctic FMP would constitute a milestone in the history of fisheries management and exemplify the progressive and proactive reputation of the Council.

Thank you for your time and consideration of these comments.

Respectfully,

N.P.F.M.C.

Dear Chairman Olson:

I am writing to thank the North Pacific Fishery Management Council for developing a forward-looking Fishery Management Plan (FMP) for US waters in the Arctic. I urge the Council to continue to exercise leadership on this issue by adopting Alternative 2 of the proposed Arctic FMP. If adopted, Alternative 2 will protect the health of the Arctic environment by closing the entire region north of the Bering Strait to all commercial fishing until it can be shown that commercial fishing can occur without harming the health of marine ecosystems or the subsistence way of life.

As the Council has recognized, global climate change is having profound effects on the marine environment of the Arctic, including rapidly shrinking sea ice cover and increasing ocean temperatures. These and related changes place great stress on Arctic ecosystems and the thousands of people who live there. Polar bears, walrus, whales, seabirds, and other Arctic animals are already struggling to adapt, and would face even more of a threat if additional human industrial activities were added to the stress of climate change.

Relatively little is known about the abundance, distribution, and role of fish and other marine species in the Chukchi and Beaufort ecosystems, and there is no way to anticipate the degree to which commercial fishing may impact these ecosystems. In light of these uncertainties and the unprecedented pressures on Arctic marine environment, I urge the council to take a precautionary approach and adopt Alternative 2 of the Arctic FMP at its February meeting in Seattle. By adopting Alternative 2, the Council will lead the world in protecting Arctic fishery resources and will set the standard—both in the United States and internationally—for responsible management in the Arctic.

Sincerely,

Ocean Conservancy

Jeff	Sloss	740 5th Street	Juneau	AK	99801-1017	There have been too many mistakes in Fisheries management resulting in overfishing and consequent closures. We need to step back and determine the absolute safe sustainable levels of harvests to maintain health of the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas. I am a resident of Oregon with nearly destroyed salmon returns to to overgenerous fishing quotas, rampant logging destroying breeding habitat and dams slowing down both the run of smolts to the ocean and the return of adults from the ocean.

Mr. Eric Olsen
Chairman
North Pacific Fishery Management Council
605 West 4th, Suite 306
Anchorage, Alaska 99501-2252

Re: Public Comments on Agenda Item C2 - Arctic Fishery Management Plan

Dear Chairman Olsen:

Thank you for your continuing efforts to establish a science-based and precautionary approach for protecting the Arctic from industrial fishing. The North Pacific Council again has the chance to lead the way in protecting Alaska's incredible ocean ecosystems and vibrant fisheries, as well as to demonstrate how we can manage the Arctic Ocean responsibly in the face of climate change. I urge you to adopt Alternative 2 for the Arctic Fishery Management Plan to close all U.S. Arctic waters to industrial fishing.

The Arctic is already facing incredible stresses from climate change. Arctic animals like the polar bear, walrus and bowhead whale are struggling to adapt to the rapid changes already happening in the Arctic. Adding industrial fishing pressures would threaten the fragile Arctic food web that these and other animals rely on for survival.

Thousands of people live in the U.S. Arctic and rely on healthy ocean ecosystems, and we cannot afford to add any industrial fishing pressures that could further threaten the health of those ecosystems.

Given the extreme threats to the Arctic, there must be a science-based and extremely precautionary approach in place before any new industrialization - including industrial fishing - expands into the Arctic Ocean. I commend you for taking a responsible course to protect the health of the Arctic for this and future generations as part of our responsibility to our children and as part of our shared natural heritage.

Please adopt Alternative 2 to close the entire Arctic Management Area to commercial fishing.

Sincerely,

*This letter was signed by 8,900 members of the public representing all 50 states. Please see attached list of names for details.
