RE: D3 – Pribilof Canyon Corals

Dear Chairman Hull and Council members,

Please accept the following comments on behalf of Greenpeace with respect to Agenda Item D-3, Pribilof Canyon corals. We appreciate the Council's commitment to consider alternatives to conserve coral habitat along the Bering Sea shelf-break.

The Ecosystem Approach

The Council's motion last April recognized that deep sea corals "may provide important ecosystem services for the maintenance of healthy Bering Sea ecosystems."

In February 2014 an Ecosystem Approach for the North Pacific Fisheries Management Council was adopted. The Council's Value Statement recognizes that the waters they manage are "experiencing an unprecedented rate of loss of sea ice and other effects of climate change, resulting in elevated levels of risk and uncertainty." Under the new policy the Council envisions sustainable fisheries that "are maintained by healthy, productive, biodiverse, resilient marine ecosystems that support a range of services; (2) support robust populations of marine species at all trophic levels, including marine mammals and seabirds; and (3) are managed using a precautionary, transparent, and inclusive process that allows for analyses of tradeoffs, accounts for changing conditions, and mitigates threats." The new Ecosystem Approach policy additionally affirms that the Vision Statement shall be given effect through all of the Council's work.

We encourage the Council to be guided in this effort by your Ecosystem Approach.

Premature Reduction of Scope of Area and Habitat

To date, this issue, previously listed on Council agendas as "Bering Sea Canyons" has included the review, habitat modeling, and new scientific investigation of the Bering Sea Canyons (particularly Zhemchug and Pribilof) and the shelf-break and slope habitat, known as the Green Belt. The Council's decision last April to limit the scope to include only Pribilof Canyon coral - before a full public process, the development of alternatives, or the subsequent analysis required under NEPA has even begun - is premature, and counter to the Ecosystem Approach policy.

In April the Council viewed NOAA visual data of important and vulnerable habitat in Zhemchug Canyon during public comment, and also heard testimony on the importance and vulnerability of sponge habitat. Subsequently, without analysis or scientific recommendation, the Council removed Zhemchug Canyon, and any other portion of the Bering Sea shelf-break and slope from the scope of the issue. Similarly, by omitting sponges from the purpose and need statement the Council has indicated only an interest in alternatives that will address fishing impacts on corals. We find these decisions to be contrary to the Council's Ecosystem Approach.

Precautionary Leadership

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council enjoys a strong reputation for their past leadership on ecosystem-based management of the resources. The Council has an opportunity to continue that leadership with this action. Fisheries science is inherently uncertain, and many gaps remain in our understanding of fishing impacts on the ecology of deep sea canyons in the Bering Sea and the reciprocal effect that may have on commercially important species. NMFS has expressly stated, "We do not know the full effects of commercial fishing on the environment, nor do we understand the effects of fishing on the ecosystem and its processes," (NMFS PSEIS, 2004). This lack of full information, uncertainty and associated risk is the reason for precaution. This action should protect representative habitat along the shelf break, including but not limited to coral habitat.

The best available science including visual data, trawl and longline survey data, bycatch data, and modeled predictions of coral habitat as indicators of vulnerable and sensitive habitat indicate that Pribilof and Zhemchug Canyons contain a large portion of the coral and sponge habitat in the Bering Sea. Protecting these and other canyons will help the Council meet several important management and conservation objectives. Protecting a portion of the shelf break will support the resilience of this important ecoregion, and provide stakeholders with an invaluable insurance policy that will help ensure the long-term sustainability of the ecosystem and the fisheries that depend on it.

We urge the Council to amend the purpose and need statement for this action to include Zhemchug Canyon, the full extent of the Green Belt zone, and all types of habitat that may be important for the species within this zone, including sponge habitat.

Process to Develop a Range of Alternatives

Management and conservation of the Bering Sea Canyons is a high profile issue marked by a wide range of views. To ensure an inclusive and transparent process we recommend the Council initiate a multi-stakeholder working group tasked with providing the Council with a refined set of alternatives. Alternatives developed and refined through a collaborative process, with Council staff and scientific guidance, will have the best chance of finding broad support throughout the process. By acting swiftly to initiate this process, the development of alternatives can get under way now. When the analysis of the 2014 camera drop research conducted along the shelf-break, slope and canyons is released these alternatives will be ready to be refined, as needed, and moved forward.

Additionally, we suggest the Council task staff with conducting a review of the alternatives provided for coral habitat protection in other regions including those considered by other Fishery Management Councils, and in British Columbia.

The Mid- Atlantic Fishery Management Council recognized the multiple provisions of the reauthorized Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (MSA) that could be used to justify protections for deep sea corals. These include:

- Bycatch authority: mandate to minimize bycatch
- Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) authority: authority to designate Essential Fish Habitat, and mandate to minimize, to the extent practicable, adverse effects on Essential Fish Habitat caused by fishing.
- Conservation of non-target species: discretionary provision to conserve target and non-target species and habitats, considering the variety of ecological factors affecting fishery populations.
- Discretionary provision to designate deep sea coral zones: Designate zones in areas where deep-sea corals are identified to protect deep-sea corals from physical damage from fishing gear, or to prevent loss of damage to such gear from interactions with deep-sea corals.

An important advantage of using EFH authority is the associated consultation requirement, which requires any federal agency proposing an action that may negatively impact EFH to consult with NMFS. We recommend the council utilize multiple authorities, as needed, under this action to provide management measures that achieve maximum benefits for the ecosystem, while also providing for continued fishing.

Guidance for Developing a Range of Alternatives

A range of alternatives should be developed that will support the Council in managing to maintain the diversity, structure and function of a healthy Bering Sea ecosystems while minimizing adverse effects, such as interactions between fishing gear and deep sea corals and sponges that may jeopardize essential fish habitat.

We recommend alternatives be developed that encompass the following recommendations which were made to the Council in February, 2014 by Greenpeace, Oceana, Marine Conservation Institute, Center for Biological Diversity, and World Wildlife Fund – five organizations representing millions of public stakeholders:

To achieve the objective of protecting representative Bering Sea slope habitat, and minimizing adverse impacts to Essential Fish Habitat including corals and sponges, management of Bering Sea Slope and Canyons (Pribilof & Zhemchug) should be designed to achieve a multitude of protections and ecosystem benefits, including but not limited to:

1. conserving fragile coral and sponge essential fish habitat
2. protecting a representative portion of the Green Belt habitat
3. providing refugia in the Bering Sea
4. mitigation of bycatch of commercially important and keystone species
5. protecting habitat essential for pelagic species e.g. spawning and foraging areas
6. providing reference areas to better gauge the ecosystem effects of climate change and fishing
7. protecting rare or vulnerable benthic habitats
8. promoting research and monitoring focused on marine living resources
9. protecting large-scale ecosystem processes responsible for the productivity and functional integrity of the ecosystem

Specific tools and/or management measures to provide protection for canyon and slope habitat should include:

1. Fully protected closures for representative habitat types
2. Exclusion of bottom-contact fishing gear
3. Continue to allow fixed-gear fisheries on customary fishing grounds, based on the past ten years of data. Prohibit expansion of fixed-gear fisheries beyond those areas.
4. Net monitors used to insure pelagic trawls maintain a minimum distance off the bottom and avoid any accidental bottom contact.
5. Incorporate net depth and distance-to-bottom monitor data into Observer Reports
6. Adaptive Management: Coral and sponge bycatch limit with move-on protocol, temporary closures and subsequent research protocol
7. Manageable geographic boundaries for management areas to assist navigation, compliance and enforcement, including buffer zones around habitat identified for management measures
8. Extend the Pribilof Island No Trawl Zone to encompass the shelf-break zone and representative slope habitat

Attachment: 12/2 Letter to NPFMC signed by 85,810 concerned citizens

Dear Chairman Hull and Council members,

Greenpeace appreciates the continued work by the North Pacific Fishery Management Council to consider management measures to conserve deep sea corals in the Bering Sea.

We represent 1.6 million members who care about the health of our ocean. Our view is that sustainable management of our oceans and fisheries must follow an ecosystem-based approach, including precautionary measures that protect vital habitat and create some fully protected areas for their many benefits.

As the Council begins a discussion on the range of alternatives to protect deep sea corals in the Bering Sea we submit the following letter signed by more than 85,000 concerned citizens. We join with these public stakeholders in urging the Council to develop alternatives based on the input of all stakeholders, in the best interest of the ecosystem.

Thank you for your consideration of these comments.

Respectfully,

Dear North Pacific Fishery Management Council,

With this letter we join with hundreds of thousands of individuals who have, over the course of more than a decade, implored you to protect the essential fish habitat in the Bering Sea Canyons.

Last year the Council received a report on the Bering Sea Canyons from NOAA scientists validating the presence of vulnerable coral and sponge habitat in Zhemchug and Pribilof Canyons. The report identifies the shelf break and associated canyons - the "Green Belt" - as containing a large portion of the coral habitat that exists in the entire Bering Sea.

We understand that the Council declared the Bering Sea canyons a high priority research item in 2006, and we appreciate the effort finally under way by NOAA scientists to increase the research record on the canyons and shelf-break, with field work scheduled in the summer of 2014. There will always be more to learn, and policy decisions will, as they always have, benefit from the best available science at the time. Enough is known now, though, to act to protect these crucial habitat areas.

Until the process to implement management measures for the canyons is completed important areas that have been identified remain vulnerable, putting at risk long-lived species that provide essential habitat for commercially important fish and other marine life in this complex ecosystem. We encourage the Council to make needed progress at this Council meeting by moving to develop alternatives immediately, considering all stakeholder input, to best protect this habitat while maintaining fishing opportunities that ultimately support productive fisheries.

Sincerely,

85,810 concerned citizens calling for action
