

Dear Chairman Kinneen and members of the NPFMC:

Alaska's fisheries are a vital part of our economy, way of life and culture. Alaska Native peoples, commercial fishermen and personal use fishermen are deeply connected to and invested in sustainably harvesting fish to feed their families and the world. As we continue to adapt to climate change and to learn about the ways the world around us is changing, it is imperative that we look at our fisheries with an ecosystem-wide perspective and address the challenges that we face with science-based evidence in a timely manner.

Over the past 10 years, Bering Sea and Gulf of Alaska trawl fleets have caught, killed and discarded approximately 141 million pounds of salmon, halibut, crab, sablefish and other species per year. This is all in the wake of Western Alaska fishing communities being closed to fishing for salmon, snow crab and Bristol Bay red king crab. Although bycatch mortality is not always a primary driver in decline, it is a compounding risk factor that contributes to decreases in abundance. The harmful impacts of closures and reduced access to our community-based fisheries are accelerated by removals of bycatch species at static rates. We recommend a comprehensive approach to bycatch management, where caps on all bycatch species are based on an analysis of the entire ecosystem and result in meaningful bycatch reduction.

Fishery issues are complex and there are many different factors at play. Thank you for working to address declining fish populations and to update the MSA National Standards guidelines to reflect the changing ecosystem and climate.

Sincerely,
